The Multi-Generational Workplace

For the first time in U.S. history, there are five generations working together in businesses and organizations across the country. With each having unique values and characteristics, generational cohorts often face challenges communicating with one another and in understanding behavioral and motivational differences. This presentation will explore the values and characteristics of each generation and introduce ways to leverage generational differences to aid in building collaborative cultures in today's generationally diverse workplaces.

Registration and lodging information to come in spring 2019.
